Reversable Door????

Bought this about a month ago and operation has been trouble free. One quirky aspect is the "reversible door." Unit is designed to have door open to the right or the left and it is fairly straight forward to change (even if instructions are not extremely clear). However since handle is fixed after switching from opening to the right to opening to left the handle is now at knee level. You can still open the door easily by grabbing the door at the seal. Other models have the handle centered on the door so whichever way the door opens it remain in the center. I emailed Eurocave but they chose not to respond.

Best wine cellar from Costco

I have this wine cellar for 2 months already and I love it. It is well constructed. Looks hight end. I got an independen thermometer to check the displayed temperature and what you see on display, is what you indeed get. My wine cellar sits in the open room on a hardwood floor and I can barely hear it when it works. Just a little bit low grumbling noise, which is noticeble if you pay attention. This is a second wine cellar I got from Costco. Prior to Artevino I had Magnum Design Cellar for 1 month and I had to return it because I couldn't stand the noise it was making. The only thing I wish Artevino cellar had is an internal lightning. That would have made it perfect.

Solid performance

After allowing the unit to rest for 3 days it was loaded and plugged in. After 3 weeks of service, it remains as quiet as a Eurocave Premier I already owned. The quality and construction appear identical and it maintains the temperature setting within +2 degrees. Was preparing to purchase a Transtherm when this unit became available and could find no discernible differences between the two. Moreover, it saved a fair amount of money. The white glove delivery did not live up to expectations however, but regardless, the unit arrived safely and is recommended.

Awesome so far!

It's great so far. We waited the 48 hours, poured the glass of water in the bottom and turned it on. I've started loading it up and getting rid of our smaller fridges.

Probably one of the most common things commented on for all wine fridges is the capacity. It says on here that is "comfortably holds 200 bottles*". Well not if you buy mainly CA reds like us. You are supposed to be able to put a case on each of the smaller shelves and I've yet to be able to do that. The bottles have to be pretty small to be able to fit 12 on one shelf. If the bottles have even a remotely high shoulder or are too long, they will not fit. So I know I won't get the advertised 200 bottles.

Otherwise it holds temperature very well to 1.5 + or -. The all black exterior is very sharp and looks awesome. The noise is about standard for what I would think something of this size would generate. It sits in our office/computer room right next to the desk and it's not distracting at all. I probably wouldn't have it in a living room or bedroom if you need complete silence, but it certainly isn't loud.

So far, I love it and its at a much better price than the Eurocave's from other places.

Love it! Love it!

One day after taking delivery, I noticed an indentation and seperation at the miter joint at the top right corner of the door. I contacted Costco and in Costco fashion they coordinated a same day swap for the old to the new...thank you Costco.

This cellar is solid, quite, good looking, and holds temps beautifully...couldn't be happier.

One heads up, I contacted "Wine Enthusiast" with a question regarding adding a glass of water on the floor of the unit for proper humidity control, then noticing a drain tube on the floor pan. I was concerned that water may end up on my hardwood floors. He stated the Art. II had a depression in the floor pan to place the water and the Art. III does not. He suggested to put the water in a shallow tupperware tray and not on the floor pan...so that's what I did.

Well Made

I bought this a few months ago. The construction quality is excellent; better than anything else in the same price point. It's made in France by the same company as Eurocave. I did a lot of research and ultimately settled on this. Happy I did. Delivery guys were great as well. One thing is that it's capacity is less than 200 bottles.

Very quiet and good value

I have had the eurocave about 30 days and so far it's worked as advertised. I am impressed that it's very quiet when the compressor runs and it's generally dead silent. It seems well made and solid. The shelves pull in and out pretty well but they aren't smooth in operation. I was able to load about 120 bottles into this 200 bottle unit. Many bottles are too long or too round to fit 6 bottle across and/or 2 deep. If you want to load more in, you can load several levels of bottles per shelf and increase the number of stored bottles. There is no light and that's a little frustrating. The instructions are simple but lack some details. I would buy this again in a heartbeat but it does have limitations in features but it's a deal for the price and backing by Costco in case something goes wrong.

Best wine storage for the price

If your looking for freestanding wine storage at a reasonable price you can't beat this one! Delivery was quick and efficient. Delivery men took good care to keep the house clean and treated the item with care. Temperature and humidity are good. Generally temperature sits at +/- .5 F and humidity at +/- 1% excellent accuracy for storage in the price range.
